Minnesota
Department of Health

At MDH we understand health has a place in all policies. Public health is affected by Minnesota's minimum wage, the availability of low-income housing, the literacy rate and many other factors. Improving all these things can have positive impacts on public health. It's more than just eating your fruits and veggies (but that helps too).

You can breathe easier in your workplace, and stay hydrated with water straight from the tap because MDH monitors and ensures drinking water quality and indoor air quality meet standards. Love to go out? MDH and our delegated partners pick up the tab when it comes to making sure your favorite restaurants are safe places to eat and drink.

So whether you're a mother receiving prenatal assistance, a child in a supplemental nutrition program, a teenager benefiting by prevention programs for tobacco use or teen pregnancy, or anyone else who lives, works or plays in Minnesota, there are many ways MDH makes your future brighter.

Did you know we have staff monitoring for possible disease outbreaks around the clock? MDH partners with health care practitioners who inform us when particular infections or diseases are diagnosed. MDH identifies, investigates, and moves to stop an infectious disease outbreak from spreading. MDH also promotes immunizations to prevent outbreaks.

We know that good health means more than just not being sick. Our goal is to make the healthy choice the easy choice. The Statewide Health Improvement Program, which invests in local solutions to better health, is just one of many MDH initiatives working to achieve that goal.
