4. Training: Every Student Connected: Building Capacity to Connect With Immigrant Students and Their Families, January 18, 2008

The student population of schools in Hennepin County is rapidly changing—even faster than the population of teachers. This can create challenges for teachers and other school staff as they try to connect with students from different backgrounds than their own. They need information and skills to support such connections to ensure the success and safety of all their students.

Workshop will include:

- Ways student connectedness can be weakened by assumptions schools make about families from diverse backgrounds.
- Concrete ideas from diverse community backgrounds involving Latino, Asian, and Somali students and families.
- Break-out sessions to answer specific questions

Forum presenters:

- Norma Garces, Hennepin County Strategic Initiative and Community Engagement
- Soua Yang, Minneapolis Public Schools
- Mohamed Duale, Hennepin County Child and Teen Checkups Program

8:30 a.m.—noon, Brookdale Library
6125 Shingle Creek Pkwy., Brooklyn Center, MN

5. Webconference: Eight Steps to Coalition Building: Fostering Strategic Partnerships to Prevent Violence Against Women, January 23, 2008

Preventing violence against women requires comprehensive approaches. Often, the best way to ensure a comprehensive strategy is to build a diverse coalition. This web conference will highlight 8 Steps to Coalition Building and explore in-depth the process of deciding whether or not a coalition is appropriate to selecting the best membership and conducting ongoing evaluation.

Presenters: Larry Cohen and Elizabeth Waiters, Prevention Institute (www.preventioninstitute.org)

Host: David Lee, Prevention Connection (www.preventconnect.org)

Registration: This session will be restricted to the first 350 people who sign up. Link to www.preventconnect.org

Cost: Free

What is a web conference?

A web conference is an opportunity to attend an online workshop. In a web conference, you watch a presentation on your computer screen (using your internet connection) while you hear the presentation through your telephone (you will dial-in to a conference call) or read the presentation through our captioning service (also on your computer screen). Web conferences feature opportunities to participate in online question & answer session and live text chat between participants. If you are unable to join on your computer, you can download the presentations slides and listen to the presentation on your telephone.

8. Training: Every Student Connected: Working to Create Equitable Schools by Challenging Class Stereotypes and Classism, February 8, 2008

Social class differences between teachers and students, if left unexamined, can disconnect students and their families from the school. School staff can build their awareness, challenge existing assumptions, and adopt practices that build solid connections with students and families from all social classes. Our presenter will be Heather Hackman, an associate professor from the Department of Human Relations and Multicultural Education, St. Cloud State University. She is a a team of passionate, experienced member of EdChange — educators dedicated to equity, diversity, multiculturalism, and social justice.

Workshop will include:

- An overview of how class inequities play out in schools.
- Understanding the difference between equality and equity.
- Methods to create schools where equity is a value and all voices are heard.
- Concrete classroom strategies to improve connections over class divides.

Sponsored by the Initiative for Violence-Free Families at Family & Children's Service, the Hennepin County Human Services and Public Health Department, and the Hennepin County Attorney's Office

9. Conference: Truth Telling in Preaching: Sexual and Domestic Violence, April 2008

Sexual and domestic violence are tragically common experiences affecting clergy, congregations, and communities. At least one in three females and one in seven males is left wounded by abuse.

How is the Good News of justice and healing preached? How do preachers go beyond a "once-a-year special service" approach so that survivors and perpetrators know they can find support from their faith, their fellow members, and the clergy themselves? Strong biblical preaching can be a lifeline that many seek and deserve for their healing to occur.

This week-long conference will provide continuing education for ministers seeking to strengthen their preaching and integrate a response to these pervasive issues into their ministries.

11. A Dangerous Transition: Women's Drinking and Related Victimization

From High School to the First Year at College

ABSTRACT. Objective: The current study assessed women's risk for victimization during the first year at college, based on changes in drinking during the transition from high school to college. We were specifically interested in differential risk for victimization based on women's change in drinking status over the transition to college. We compared continued abstainers with women who began drinking ("new" drinkers) and women who continued drinking but either decreased, increased, or did not change their level of weekly drinking. Method: Data were collected using a Web-based survey each fall for the first 2 years at college with one cohort (N = 886) of incoming freshmen women at a large state university in New York. Women reported on their alcohol and other drug use, psychological symptoms, number of sexual partners, and experiences with physical and sexual victimization for the year before entering college (Year 1 survey) and for the first year at college (Year 2 survey). Results: Abstainers were significantly less likely to experience physical or sexual victimization during the first year at college, compared with drinkers. Logistic regression indicated that there were differences in the predictors of physical and sexual victimization during the first year at college. These differences included history of victimization, psychological symptoms, and number of sexual partners, as well as the type of change in drinking over the transition. Conclusions: In comparison with abstainers, having a history of physical victimization, greater psychological symptoms, and being a "new" drinker increased the odds of physical victimization, whereas having a greater number of current psychological symptoms, sexual partners, and increasing weekly drinking increased the odds of sexual victimization during the first year at college. These findings have implications for prevention efforts targeting young women entering college.

12. Poverty and Sexual Violence: Building Prevention and Intervention Responses

The Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape announces a new resource, Poverty and Sexual Violence: Building Prevention and Intervention Responses. There is a complex and often reciprocal relationship between poverty and sexual violence. This guide is intended to support rape crisis centers in their economic advocacy efforts at all levels of the organization, using the Spectrum of Violence Prevention as a blueprint in responding to the needs of victims, survivors, and communities. To these ends, the guide includes: a definition and discussion of terms, literature review, discussion of the philosophical framework for economic advocacy, ways to apply economic advocacy to the work, tools and resources, and fact sheets.

This guide is available on the PCAR web site (www.pcar.org) under resources. If you would like more information, contact Donna Greco (717-728-9740, ext. 115 or dgreco@pcar.org).

14. New Book: Shout Out: Women of Color Respond to Violence

A great new resource...What makes this anthology so special is that it features, exclusively, the unique--and chronically underrepresented--voices of women of color.

Publisher's Weekly describes Shout Out as "[a] distressing anthology -equal arts manifesto, testimony and manual-[gathering] over 40 scholarly essays, spoken word pieces, poems and short memoirs about 'war, rape, murder, atrocities, slavery, sex trade, domestic violence, poverty, and other forms of oppression' faced by women of color around the globe....This highly personal and political anthology will unsettle, inform and inspire feminists in particular."
