Child Trends Research Brief: Telling it Like it is: Teen Perspectives on Romantic Relationships

This Research Brief summarizes findings from the focus groups. What we learned was both encouraging and sobering. In general, the teens showed that they knew what a healthy teen relationship should look like; that is, it should be marked by respect, honesty, fidelity, good communication, and the absence of violence. Yet, at the same time, many of the teens expressed pessimism about their chances of experiencing that type of relationship themselves. Nor did they know many adults whose romantic relationships were worthy of emulation. January is Stalking Awareness Month

The first month of 2010 is Stalking Awareness Month, and once again, OVW is proud to fund the *Stalking Resource Center*¹ and the *Stalking Awareness Month Resources*² website, in cooperation with National Center for Victims of Crime.³ Stalking can be defined as a pattern of repeated and unwanted attention, harassment, contact, or any other course of conduct directed at a specific person that would cause a reasonable person to feel fear. The *2008 Stalking Victimization Report*⁴ found that, during a 12 month period, an estimated 3.4 million persons age 18 or older were victims of stalking. Nearly 75 percent of victims knew their offender in some capacity. Stalking victims most often identified the stalker as a former intimate partner (22 percent) or a friend, roommate, or neighbor (16 percent). The report confirmed what we knew to be true: domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking crimes are not isolated from each other, but happen as part of a continuum in many victims' lives. I encourage all of you to join OVW in raising awareness in your community and focusing attention on this serious and violent crime.

New Resource: Juveniles Who Commit Sex Offenses Against Minors
From the National Sexual Violence Resource Center: *Juveniles Who Commit Sex Offenses Against Minors (David Finkelhor, Richard Ormrod, and Mark Chaffin - Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, December 2009)

Research on juvenile sex offenders goes back more than half a century; however, little information about these young offenders and their offenses exists. This Bulletin draws on data from the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Incident-Based Reporting System to provide population-based epidemiological information on juvenile sex offending. It is OJJDP's hope that the findings reported in this Bulletin and their implications will help inform the policy and practice of those committed to addressing the sexual victimization of youth and strengthening its prevention and deterrence—considerations that are critical to success.

New Resources Addressing the Perpetration of Sexual Violence
From the National Online Resource Center on Violence Against Women, VAWnet.¹

This special collection provides resources that address the topics of sex offender risk, assessment, management, treatment, and supervision. In addition, there is a special focus on the policies that have been created in the past decade to help keep our communities safer. Additional resources including book titles, articles, reports, and journals can be found by browsing the library at the National Sexual Violence Resource Center.²
