5. Breaking the Bonds of Injustice, October 30, 2010, Minneapolis, MN

In the world people are hurt by sex, money, privilege and abuse of all kinds, even spiritual abuse. How can we help? Breaking the Bonds of Injustice is a free mini-conference that brings together individuals and organizations in the Twin Cities involved in helping victims of human trafficking and other injustices. The conference is sponsored by the Biblical Justice Center of North Central University, Peace and Hope International and Servants of Mercy of North Heights Lutheran Church.

Guests will have an opportunity to attend breakout sessions on various topics related to human trafficking and to learn about ways to get involved locally. The final portion of the conference will provide a time of testimonies from those who have journeyed through abuse. Learn how we can come alongside these individuals through prayer and action.

The date of the event is Saturday, October 30 from 5:00-8:30 p.m. located in the Trask Word and Worship building on the North Central University Campus.

8. Article: Feds Undercounting Rape Victims, Advocates Warn

By Emma Lacey-Bordeaux, CNN
September 14, 2010 9:01 p.m. EDT

Washington (CNN) -- Are law enforcement officials producing misleading statistics on the prevalence of rape in America? Yes, victims' advocates warn.

Sen. Arlen Specter, D-Pennsylvania, who convened a hearing Tuesday on the "chronic failure to report and investigate rape cases," agrees. Specter also indicated during the Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing that he would push for change.

At issue is the FBI's 2009 annual crime report -- released Monday -- which shows the total number of forcible rapes in America declining 2.6 percent compared with 2008 and 6.6 percent compared with 2005. There were slightly over 88,000 forcible rapes last year, the FBI estimated.
