6. Message on sexual violence prevention to be broadcast in three

languages

With the help of advocates from three cultural communities, translations of the following message are currently being broadcast in Spanish, Somali, and Hmong:

The following public service announcement is brought to you by the Minnesota Department of Health Sexual Violence Prevention Program. Picture the new Minnesota Twins stadium filled with people, standing room only. That's how many Minnesotans are affected by sexual harm each year. You can help change this picture. Pay attention to sexually demeaning messages on TV, internet, and advertising and discuss them with family and friends. Speak up when you see disrespect. One person can make a difference in preventing sexual harm.

The announcement will be broadcast on KFAI Radio -- <http://www.kfai.org/> -- through the first week in November, on the following programs:

8. New Resources: Disaster and Emergency Preparedness and Response

Disaster and Emergency Preparedness and Response.

This collection highlights the disproportionate vulnerability of women and children to domestic and sexual violence in disaster and emergency situations, and organizes information to help increase the safety and well being of those at higher risk for violence (or re-traumatization) during and after a major disaster or crisis.

(Note that the terms “disaster” and “emergency” are being used broadly to refer to major traumatic events and crisis situations that are either natural [e.g., hurricanes, earthquakes, tornados, etc.] or man-made [e.g., massacres, terrorist attacks, etc.]).

9. New Resource: Training Professionals in the Primary Prevention of Sexual and Intimate Partner Violence: A Planning Guide

Sexual violence and intimate partner violence are complex, multifaceted issues that affect all sectors of our communities. Preventing sexual violence and/or intimate partner violence requires a comprehensive approach involving many individuals, organizations, and sectors. We know from our experience with other public health issues that primary prevention strategies that take place before violence occurs can work. An effective, comprehensive program to prevent sexual violence and/or intimate partner violence takes a multitude of approaches, one of which is training professionals to engage in sexual violence prevention and/or intimate partner prevention.

CDC's Injury Center is pleased to announce the release of Training Professionals in the Primary Prevention of Sexual and Intimate Partner Violence: A Planning Guide.

This publication describes how to develop, implement, and evaluate a process for training professionals to engage in sexual violence and intimate partner violence prevention. The Guide is designed to help practitioners tailor individual trainings to different groups of professionals. It includes real-life examples to illustrate theory put into practice. In addition to step-by-step guidance on all the tasks necessary for planning training, the Guide includes tip sheets, worksheets, checklists, and an extensive resource list. The Guide is available on-line:

11. Archived webinar: “No Place Like Home: The Impact of Sexual Violence on Housing” is now available online

This NSVRC recorded webinar draws from available research and discusses the interconnectedness of sexual violence and housing, especially in rural areas. The Spectrum of Prevention is applied as a blueprint for community-based housing advocacy strategies.

Webinar leaders are Kristin Weschler of the U.S. Office on Violence Against Women and Donna Greco of the National Sexual Violence Resource Center. This webinar provides useful information and strategies for those involved in advocacy, direct service and/or policymaking related to housing or sexual violence.

Commentary: How many women have endured a rape, and said nothing? by Nancy Donoval, 10/8/10

In all the coverage of the recent sexual assaults at the University of Minnesota, there's one line I just can't get out of my head.

In the St. Paul Pioneer Press, a campus police spokesman noted how unusual it is to have so many incidents reported in just two weeks.

The key word here is "reported." What's unusual is that this many assaults got reported so close together -- not that they happened.

13. Article: Sex Trafficking at Home

American Indian, Native Alaskan and Native Canadian women and girls from rural areas are prime targets for sex traffickers

By Mary Annette Pember

10/14/2010

“Joker waited until I had brought myself down really low. That’s when he pushed me to work for the gang,” Maggie told me.

Maggie, 41, is from the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota; She is describing how her boyfriend, Joker, began trafficking her into the sex trade.

Fleeing a violent husband, she left the reservation for a new life in Minneapolis She became addicted to drugs and came to rely on her boyfriend, a member of a local street gang, for drugs and companionship. Soon, however, he insisted that she be initiated into his gang, a process involving gang rape by several members. He also insisted that she must contribute to the gang by trading sex for drugs and money. He routinely drives her to meet “dates,” men with whom she will trade sex for money or drugs.

“He told me he loves me and that all his friends did the same thing with their girlfriends,” she said. Sometimes, Maggie admits, she helps coerce other Indian girls into prostitution for the gang. “He said if I really loved him, I would do anything for him,” she said.

Article: Child porn cases take toll on investigators

By Del Quentin Wilber

12/01/09

D.C. police detective Timothy Palchak spends his days trawling the Internet for people willing to send him child pornography. It isn't easy work, pretending to be a pedophile. In online chats, instant messages and telephone calls, Palchak must enter the psyche of men he describes as "the scum of the Earth."
