1. Congratulations to Patty Wetterling!

At the December Annual Meeting of the Board of Directors for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, Patty Wetterling was elected to be the new Chairwoman Elect. The National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, (NCMEC), is a private, (501)(c)(3) nonprofit organization which was created in 1984. The mission of the organization is to serve as the nation's resource on the issues of missing and sexually exploited children. The organization provides information and resources to law enforcement, parents, and children, including child victims, as well as other professionals.

Patty has served on the board since 1991 as Board Secretary, Vice-Chair, and a member of the Program, Public Policy and Prevention Policy Committees.

"I am thrilled and honored to have been elected to serve in this capacity. The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children has been a source of strength and hope for me for the past 22 years. I have lived and witnessed the profound impact they have on the lives of children and their families in this country and around the world. I am grateful for the opportunity to give back."

Officers are elected for 2 year terms. Patty will be the first Chairwoman of the National Center since it was formed in 1984.

January is National Slavery and Human Trafficking Prevention Month in the U.S.

January is set as a permanent month of awareness for those who are denied their basic fundamental human rights by human trafficking in the US and around the world. The statistics are bleak, and in a country like the US 90% of human trafficking is sex trafficking, an estimated 80% of human trafficking victims are females, and 50% are children.

There are approximately 100,000 to 300,000 children forced into prostitution yearly in the United States alone. Global figures are in the millions. Hotels and resorts have been receiving more attention over accountability issues regarding human and sex trafficking.

One group, meeting planners, has taken the initiative to sign the Tourism Child-Protection Code of Conduct. Continue reading:

5. Child-on-child sex abuse: a vast and complicated problem that defies stereotypes

David Crary, Associated Press, Updated: January 7, 2012 - 2:14 PM

NEW YORK - Recent high-profile cases of child sex abuse have roused national revulsion against the adults who perpetrated them. Rarely mentioned is the sobering statistic that more than one-third of the sexual abuse of America's children is committed by other minors.

For many of the therapists and attorneys who deal with them, these juvenile offenders pose a profoundly complicated challenge for the child-protection and criminal justice systems. It's a diverse group that defies stereotypes, encompassing a minority of youths who represent a threat of long-term danger to others, and a majority who are responsive to treatment and unlikely to reoffend.

"There's a long continuum, from kids who will never do it again to a kid who probably will be an adult rapist/pedophile," said Steve Bengis, executive director of the New England Adolescent Research Institute in Holyoke, Mass. "It's not a 'one size fits all' yet we end out with public policy that's geared toward the worst 5 percent."

That public policy includes a federal law, the Adam Walsh Act, with a requirement that states include certain juvenile offenders as young as 14 on their sex-offender registries. Many professionals who deal with young offenders object to the requirement, saying it can wreak lifelong harm on adolescents who might otherwise get back on the track toward law-abiding, productive lives.

Some states have balked at complying with the juvenile registration requirement, even at the price of losing some federal criminal-justice funding. Other states have provisions tougher than the federal act, subjecting children younger than 14 to the possibility of 25-year or lifetime listings on publicly accessible registries that include photos of the offenders. 6. US redefines rape to count more people as victims

January 7, 2012

By Pete Yost, Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Obama administration says it is expanding the FBI's more than eight-decade-old definition of rape to reflect a better understanding of the crime and to broaden protections. The new definition counts men as victims for the first time and drops the requirement that victims must have physically resisted their attackers.

Vice President Joe Biden, author of the Violence Against Women Act when he was in the Senate, said the new definition announced Friday is a victory for women and men "whose suffering has gone unaccounted for over 80 years." Calling rape a "devastating crime," the vice president said, "We can't solve it unless we know the full extent of it."

The change will increase the number of people counted as rape victims in FBI statistics but will not change federal or state laws or alter charges or prosecutions. It's an important shift because lawmakers and policymakers use crime statistics to allocate money and other resources for prevention and victim assistance. The White House said the expanded definition has been long awaited as many states and research groups made similar changes in their definitions of rape over recent decades.

Since 1929, the FBI has defined rape as the carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will. The revised definition covers any gender of victim or attacker and includes instances in which the victim is incapable of giving consent because of the influence of drugs or alcohol or because of age. Physical resistance is not required.

The Justice Department said the new definition mirrors the majority of state rape statutes now on the books. Continue reading: <http://minnesota.publicradio.org/display/web/2012/01/07/redefining-rape/>

7. Rape more common than smoking in the US

Sexual violence is a pervasive public health problem in the United States. In December 2011, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention released the National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey. Throughout the country, headlines of local and national papers described that rape is more common than previously thought.

Today an article published on Significance Magazine's web site, a publication of the American Statistical Association and Royal Statistical Society, compared these rates to those of smoking – 18.3% of women over 18 reported being sexual assaulted in their lifetime while 17.4% of women reported smoking. Let's consider this as we set health priorities.

Just as in smoking prevention, preventing sexual violence before it happens in the first place is crucial. NISVS demonstrated that sexual violence often first happens when people are young, thus early prevention efforts are vital.

8. Resources from the Prevention Institute

12 for 2012: Prevention Institute's most popular resources.

2012 begins with many new opportunities to build on the impressive accomplishments of prevention advocates in the past year. We have been proud to work alongside communities and organizations making substantial policy and environmental changes to support health.

To support that work, Prevention Institute has continued to build a library of free, online publications, tools and resources designed to help you put prevention and equity at the center of community wellbeing. We invite you to start 2012 by reading and sharing our 12 most popular resources. Included in the collection:

Addressing the Intersection: Preventing Violence and Promoting Healthy Eating and Active Living: Our brief on how the inter-relationship between violence and healthy eating and activity affects community health was shared at a Congressional Briefing in 2011, co-sponsored by Senator Tom Harkin and Congresswoman Barbara Lee. Find out how you can prevent chronic disease in communities heavily impacted by violence.

Prevention is Primary: Strategies for Community Wellbeing: Hundreds of public health teachers and leaders joined webinars highlighting the 2011 edition of our landmark textbook, designed to prepare public health advocates, the primary care workforce, and community-based organizations to fully participate in the new national conversation on prevention.

UNITY Fact Sheets: Links Between Violence and Chronic Diseases, Mental Illness and Poor Learning, and Links Between Violence and Health Equity: Fact sheets from PI's Urban Networks to Increase Thriving Youth (UNITY) have been shared by the CDC, WHO, and many other public health networks. Find out how violence affects other health problems and community concerns, such as chronic diseases, mental illness, poor learning and equitable health outcomes.

Spectrum of Prevention: Prevention Institute's signature tool is designed to help conceptualize multifaceted strategies for supporting health, in the first place. Use our unique framework to explore and identify opportunities to create comprehensive change within organizations, institutions, and in the political sphere.

9. National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey Fact Sheet

The NISVS Fact Sheet provides a brief overview of the data from a national study conducted to assess the impact of sexual violence, stalking, and intimate partner violence. It discusses the scope of these forms of violence, the immediate impacts of victimization, and the lifelong health consequences experienced by victims.

This information may help to inform policies on prevention and response efforts in the field. Other resources related to this Fact Sheet include the full Summary Report:
