Register Now for...SVPN Meeting/Videoconference/Live Webstream: Engaging Spiritual Communities in Preventing Child Sexual Exploitation and Abuse, Wednesday, May 2, 2012, St. Paul, MN

Engaging Spiritual Communities in Preventing Child Sexual Exploitation and Abuse

You are invited to explore a new model to engage spiritual communities in preventing child sexual exploitation and abuse: a Spiritual Communities Prevention Tree. You will experience how the model works, how it was used in three test communities, and how a spiritual community – yours or others with which you work – can make use of it.

Speakers:

Libby Bergman, Executive Director of the Family Enhancement Center, Minneapolis, MN and

Amy Hartman, National Director of Cherish Our Children, Minneapolis, MN

Libby and Amy served as Co-Chairs for the Spiritual Communities Action Team in connection with the MN Department of Health – Sexual Violence Prevention Program.

Date: Wednesday, May 2, 10:30 a.m. – 1:30 p.m. (note: we're meeting on a Wednesday not a Friday this time)

Demand the Change for Children Celebration
Saturday, April 28, 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Mall of America Rotunda

Join us for this fun, inspirational, and family-friendly celebration to mobilize the community to end child sexual abuse and to celebrate children. You don't usually hear "fun," "inspirational," and "family-friendly" in the same sentence as child sexual abuse, but child sexual abuse:

- * Is something we can easily talk about;
- * Is preventable; and
- * You can be part of the solution!

Be part of a movement dedicated to social justice and social change to stop the sexual harm before it is ever perpetrated. See how you/we can make a better world...beginning today!

Program and Entertainment

- * Emcee: T. Mychael Rambo (Emmy award winning actor, vocalist, arts educator, NAACP Image Award Nominee and affiliate professor at U of MN College of Theatre Arts and Dance)
- * Children's and Youth voices
- * Stories of Healing and Inspiring Acts of Prevention
- * Wishing Pond
- * Drumming

The Smooch! Project and Smooch! Photo Booth

Bonnie Fournier, founder of The Smooch! Project will be on hand for a Smooch! shoot, an international effort to collect 10,000 pictures of people showing affection to someone they love. Join us for this Smooch! shoot.

Context

In the recently released National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Study, The Centers for Disease Control states: "Prevention efforts should start early by promoting healthy, respectful relationships in families...and emotionally supportive environments. These relationships provide a strong foundation for children, help them to adopt positive interactions based on respect and trust, and foster effective and non-violent communication."

8. 2012 Summer Institute in Adolescent Health: Equal Access, Equal Say: Achieving Health Equity for All Young People, July 30-August 1, 2012, St. Paul, MN

Change – the one word that best epitomizes adolescence – changing bodies, changing schools, changing friends. While change is essential for healthy transitions to adulthood, it can also increase vulnerability. For young people, inequitable conditions in families, schools, and communities can lead to dramatically differing pathways to adulthood, some healthier than others. Inequities in social determinants of health abound – socio-economic status, housing, physical environment, food security, neighborhood safety, social support, health care services, transportation, and working conditions, to name a few.

What helps all young people achieve their highest level of health? Assuring optimal health for all requires equalizing the conditions for health – life-skills, access to quality services, educational attainment, readiness for gainful employment, and opportunities to participate as citizens. This means that we must pay attention to creating services and programs that are accessible, acceptable, appropriate, and effective.

During the 2012 Summer Institute in Adolescent Health, consider the myriad of social, political, educational, environmental and economic conditions that underlie disparities in health. Visit settings that are successfully addressing avoidable inequalities that impact adolescents. Talk with young people and their program leaders along with health providers and educators who have walked the talk of health equity in just, creative, and empowering ways.

Learn strategies for assuring supportive environments, sustaining authentic relationships, and providing services that are responsive to the uniqueness of each young person. Gain new skills to effectively advocate for health equity for all young people.

10. Campaign Launched To Raise Awareness of Teen Dating Violence Nationwide

According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, one in four teens will experience abuse in his or her dating relationship by age 18. To help address this issue, Verizon Wireless has teamed up with Cornerstone, a domestic violence agency based in Minnesota, and MTE Inc. in a nationwide campaign to raise awareness of teen dating violence. PAVE (Preventing Abuse and Violence Through Education) the Way Project is designed to promote healthy relationships and empower teens to take a stand against dating violence through the expression of pop music.

Through PAVE the Way Project, seven youth artists aged 13 to 20, from across the country, contributed original songs to the non-profit project to raise awareness of dating violence alongside their peers. The project launches April 10 with an interactive website where songs will be available as free downloads. One new track will be released each Tuesday through May 22 as follows:

April 24: Dymond Harding, Ypsilanti, Mich.

May 1: Picture Me Broken, Redwood City, Calif.

May 8: Charlie Dane, Oyster Bay, N.Y.

May 15: Shanell McCoy, Minneapolis

May 22: Conor Flynn, Stamford, Conn.

From May 29 – June 12, the public will have the opportunity to vote for their favorite track at www.pavethewayproject.com. The winning artist will then perform in a recording of a new song written by GRAMMY® Award winner Salvador Santana, collaborating alongside his father, 10-time GRAMMY® Award winner, Carlos Santana.

The famed music pair is showing support for this initiative through the power of music to connect with youth around dating violence issues. "I feel so blessed to be a part of the Pave The Way Project. It's a wonderful opportunity for me to meet and collaborate with fresh, up-and-coming artists and musicians," said Salvador Santana. "For those who are involved, we all keep the same goal in mind - we want to continue to help raise awareness against teen dating violence, because the youth are our future."

PAVE the Way Project also serves to teach youth the importance of dating violence awareness and healthy relationships through the use of educational materials. The project's website includes tips for teens who may find themselves, or a friend, in an unhealthy relationship. Educators can visit www.pavethewayproject.com to register for free access to the KNOW ABUSE™ curriculum developed by Cornerstone's school-based violence prevention program staff.

"This campaign provides information in a way young people will connect to, as well as relevant classroom material on the importance of healthy relationships," said Barton K. Erickson, Cornerstone's school-based violence prevention coordinator. "The KNOW ABUSE™ curriculum engages youth in a variety of learning methods simultaneously by incorporating youth-created media and interactive audience participation."

"Teen dating violence is a serious social issue in the community and we are leveraging our resources to help teens across the country," said Marquett Smith, vice president of communications for Verizon Wireless. "We believe that through strong private partnerships we can help youth understand the issue and find support."

Through its partnership with PAVE the Way Project, Verizon Wireless continues its commitment to preventing dating and domestic violence in the community. HopeLine® from Verizon, Verizon Wireless' recycling program, puts our technology to work by turning no-longer-used cell phones into support for domestic violence victims and survivors. Since its launch in 2001, Verizon Wireless has distributed nearly 123,000 HopeLine phones with the equivalent of more than 406 million minutes of wireless service for use by domestic violence victims, survivors and organizations. Verizon Wireless' UHopeLine program helps schools raise awareness of dating and domestic violence and gives back to those who have been affected by hosting phone drives on campus and other events to spread the word across campuses nationwide.

11. Changing Perceptions of Sexual Violence Over Time

Changing Perceptions of Sexual Violence Over Time by Sarah McMahon in consultation with Karen Baker (October 2011).

http://www.vawnet.org/sexual-violence/summary.php?doc_id=2956&find_type=web_desc_AR

In Brief: Despite a rich history of advocacy for legal reform, community education, the rights of victims, and a notable body of research, many people still hold on to stereotypes about stranger rapes in dark alleys. These ideas have become more subtle over time, but there is still work to do to improve public understanding.

We've moved to an understanding of sexual violence as a continuum. Laws have changed in a way that recognizes a continuum of acts and behaviors as sexually violent (Spohn & Horney, 1992). Laws now recognize a range of acts, from completed rape to unwanted touching or sexual harassment (Centers for Disease Control, 2009). Degrading language or pornography, which are more common, also contribute to the continuum (Kelly, 1987; McMahon, Postmus & Koenick, 2011; Stout, 1991). The general public is still most likely to call something sexual violence if force is involved (McMahon et al, 2011).

Perceptions about perpetrators can reinforce rape myths. Research over time revealed that many rapists are actually "everyday" type men. Studies on college campuses suggested that many men (6-14%) report sexually violent behaviors (Lisak & Miller, 2002). Despite this, many people still believe that a perpetrator is sick or disturbed (O'Neil & Morgan, 2010).

Racism also plays a role in how the public perceives a perpetrator. Black men are often viewed as more blameworthy than white men (Donovan, 2007; George & Martinez, 2006; Varelas & Foley, 1998). Outdated beliefs about who commits sexual violence still influence perceptions. These beliefs also impact the way we understand the causes of sexual violence.

Many people still blame the victim. The way that the public perceives a victim of sexual violence often involves victim-blaming (Maurer & Robinson, 2008). Blame for sexual violence has become more subtle over time (Ferro, Cermele, & Saltzman, 2008). Blatant blame may be socially unacceptable, but many attitudes remain the same.

Sexual violence is connected to all forms of oppression. There are also many attitudes and beliefs about who can be a victim of sexual violence. Most research focuses on women. Research with male victims has found that gay victims are judged more harshly (Davies & Rogers, 2006). Homophobic attitudes are correlated with whether or not a person will blame the victim for their experience (Davies & Rogers, 2006). Racism has played a role in how the public perceived victims in the past, and still plays a part in attitudes today (West, 2006; Donovan, 2007). Cultural norms and public perceptions may actually keep many people from accessing services or reporting sexual violence.

Taking steps towards changing perceptions in the future. The current research available may help to guide the efforts of advocates and practitioners. The four main areas discussed include: 1) shifting educational efforts to the causes of sexual violence, 2) addressing subtle victim blaming, 3) finding ways to engage communities, and 4) developing culturally-specific interventions.

(From the Minnesota Center Against Violence and Abuse MINCAVA Electronic Clearinghouse <http://www.mincava.umn.edu/whatsnew>)

Healthy sexuality for sexual violence prevention: A report on promising curriculum-based approaches (Virginia Healthy Sexuality Workgroup)

This report is the result of a collaborative effort among the Virginia Healthy Sexuality Workgroup to look into programs that promote (or have the potential to promote) healthy sexuality. This task included researching existing evidence-informed criteria for prioritizing and recommending these programs. The 4 curricula recommended by this report are consistent with a healthy sexuality paradigm (which includes primary sexual violence prevention), and should be considered promising methods of delivering educational outcomes to that effect.
