1. National Let's Talk Month in October

MN ENABL is an initiative of the Minnesota Department of Health (MDH) to prevent adolescent pregnancy. The project utilizes a multi-faceted, primary prevention, community health promotion approach to reduce adolescent pregnancies.

October is designated as Let's Talk Month and is a national campaign that emphasizes the importance of communication between adults and youth in helping young people develop responsible, positive attitudes and behaviors about sexuality. Religious organizations, media, businesses, schools and community agencies can assume a leadership role by providing information, resources, educational programs and special events for parents and children.

Providing youth with accurate, reliable sexuality education is an important responsibility of parenthood. Given the special nature of the parent-child relationship, most children would prefer learning about sexuality from their parents. Parents can be effective in educating their children about sexuality without being "experts." In addition to information, parents should share their values and beliefs about sexuality with their children. Research indicates that when parents and youth discuss sexuality together, the teens are more likely to postpone initiation of sexual intercourse.

Parents are among the primary sexuality educators of their children, but there are many other places where families can learn about sexuality. Every state, local community, religious institution, prevention project, school, youth organization, and parent is encouraged to plan activities and events this month.

Twenty three community-based projects in Minnesota participate in the state/federally funded and administered MN ENABL project. They represent both urban and rural areas, serve a diverse group of adolescents and include school districts, non-profit organizations, and a family service collaborative. They will also be coordinating events for Let's Talk Month

If you would like to know the names/location of the community based project, would like to know what activities they are hosting for the month of October, or have questions/comments
